

I am concerned over the on-going BPL debate and the ramifications that its implementation could very likely have on the pre existing amateur radio community. As the FCC is mandated to protect licensed users of the spectrum, I would like to ask that the FCC uphold their committment in this regard by realizing that the present FCC Part 15 affords substantial interference potential as it is; therefore, further grants to BPL purveyors would only worsen what is already a bad situation.

Lately, my wife and I have found ourselves very dissatisfied with the position the FCC has taken on other issues and are wondering if the organization is nothing but a shill for big business over the best interest of the people whom the FCC has been charged with serving.

Thank you,
